

General Tilghman Ashurst Howard,

On the occasion of the arrival of his remains at the
City of Indianapolis, Indiana.

BY MRS SARAH T. BOLTON.

Go forth, to join the funeral train;
With slow and solemn tread;
They bear him to his last abode—
Our noble Howard, dead.
Not with the voice of song they come;
Not with the banner's wave,
They bear the silent shroud home
To lay him in the grave.

Tell, tell ye now, the mournful knell,
Ye thousands, who have hung
Upon the thrilling words that fell
From his extraneous tongue—
Not in the pride of man's might;
Not with the beaming brow;
Not with the flashing eye of light,
Conceal his gifted soul.

Go, with the trembling heart and tear

On the occasion of the arrival of his remains at the
City of Indianapolis, Indiana.

BY MRS SARAH T. BOLTON.

Go forth, to join the funeral train;
With slow and solemn tread;
They bear him to his last abode—
Our noble Howard, dead.
Not with the voice of song they come;
Not with the banner's wave,
They bear the silent shroud home
To lay him in the grave.

Tell, tell ye now, the mournful knell,
Ye thousands, who have hung
Upon the thrilling words that fell
From his extraneous tongue—
Not in the pride of man's might;
Not with the beaming brow;
Not with the flashing eye of light,
Conceal his gifted soul.

Go, with the trembling heart and tear

Go with the cypress boughs;
Go and gaze on the lowly bier,
Where flowers of slumbers now
By thy proud wave, undying fame,
By many a leaf that stirs,
We feel, we know his dear blessed name
Lives in a thousand hearts.
How shall the minstrel sing of him;
How tell his matchless worth,
A voice is hushed, a stir is dim,
A light hath passed from earth.
The color of a flower is spent,
Lost is a music strain,
A bright, a noble line is rent
In fond affection's chain.
And ye, who sit around his death,
Where Love's deep pulses beat,
Through toil and sorrow, care and mirth,
And in it thus ye meet?
Ye have not gazed upon his brow,
His cherished form for years,

He comes! how will ye greet him now
In sorrow and in tears.
He comes, but not so once he came,
Your cherished one, your own,
Breathing each dear, familiar name,
In fond affection's tone.
Ye miss him much, ye sicken band,
Ye miss his watchful love,
But meet him, in the better land,
His shining home above.
His country, faithful to his trust,
Hath sought him where he fell,
To hold the angel-guarded dust,
Of him she loved so well.
And when the presence is afar,
A dreamy by-gone age,
His name, like some resplendent star,

to Bennett, of the N. Y. Herald, in a letter from Europe, says—

The Mexican war, and the subscriptions for the Irish, strike with equal force, and leave the European mind in a state of amazement. Many are beginning to perceive that the present startling closeness of the rail-work in the United States, and every arrival is watched for with the preliminary exclamation—"I wonder what the devil the Americans will do next!" The truth is, that the United States are beginning to exercise a mighty influence in Europe. From the lie that the republic has now reached, no one can tell the limits of her power, progress, or preponderance. One of the leading London journals says—"but in June, half a century after the Americans go on at this rate, feeding one hemisphere and fighting the other, the time may come when a Louis Philippe will be a pre-settled in Paris under the authority of a Mr. President Polk, and a Sir Robert Peel will be happy to become the collector of the port of London or Liverpool, under the growing power of the American republic, for everything—for war, commerce, navigation, agriculture, art, manufactures—seem to beget a general assent, and an undisguisable dread in all those connected with the present governments in France, that the power of Europe seems to be on the eve of development. In fact, the United States, as a nation, is rapidly entering into the European system, and is actually disturbing their old visions of the balance of power.

The following toast of Mr. Webster, at the Richmond dinner, would have been more beautiful and striking, if he had been more correct in his geography:

York and Yorktown—Where the settlement of Virginia commenced, and the revolution ended.

He should have said James-town and York-town. The one is on the James river, the other on York river. A few miles only separate the two places.—Union

A BEAUTIFUL SENTIMENT.—The Webster dinner at the city of Richmond is represented to have been a brilliant affair. The following toast with which Mr. Daniel concluded a speech on that occasion, is incomparably beautiful and expressive :
'The States of the Union—Distinct like the billow but one like the sea.'
